

Violent conflicts between herders and farmers have been in existence for several years in farming communities of West Africa. However recent trends indicate an upsurge of this conflict in frequency and intensity across agrarian communities of Ghana and Nigeria.