Stories from the Frontlines

The Coronavirus aka COVID 19 was first reported in Wuhan – China on December 31, 2019. By February 2020, the pandemic had assumed global proportions affecting more than 4 million people in 175 countries (May 01, 2020), recording nearly 300,000 deaths and more than a million recoveries. According to statistics from the World Health Organization of May 12, 2020, 53 countries in Africa have been affected with 63,119 cumulative cases, 2,331 reported deaths and 22,975 reported recoveries. The spate of the pandemic resulted to governments imposing stringent measures in an effort to contain the pandemic. Some of these measures included border closures, ban on international travels, partial/total lockdowns, restriction of movements, shut down of schools and ban on public gatherings among others.

The pandemic still rages on with disastrous economic, political and social consequences particularly in the West African region already overwhelmed by other human security challenges! COVID 19 has come to worsen a bad situation, especially for women who always bore the brunt of conflicts and wars as well as suffer disproportionately within the political, social and economic governance space. The real impact of the pandemic may not really be determined in the face of inadequate data disaggregation. Also, from the onset, there was no deliberate attempt to capture the magnitude of the pandemic on women due to the fact that earlier cases were mostly men.

The West Africa Network for Peacebuilding (WANEP) through its National Early Warning System (NEWS) has been monitoring the impact of the pandemic and its disastrous effects on all aspects of human security. WANEP has utilized its Women in Peacebuilding Network (WIPNET) program to make significant interventions and contributions towards alleviating COVID 19 impact on women across the region. This maiden edition of GENDERConnect is dedicated to the work of WANEP on the field. It chronicles the practical interventions being carried out on a daily basis by WANEP in its efforts to actualize its commitments to the Women, Peace and Security (WPS) agenda.

Discussions have covered the COVID 19 pandemic from a gender perspective and its impact on mental health, gender-based violence and youth restiveness. The issue of stigmatization was also explored. In addition, the network produced situation tracking documents and conducted an online survey to document incidences of SGBV during this COVID 19 period to gather statistics of prevalence for appropriate referral services and interventions.
